“ Hector was my uncle. He was 3 years younger than me. We grew up more like cousins or siblings. It was the 4 of us. My uncle CJ (Carlos), me , Hector and my younger sister Lisa. The 4 of us were together a lot. Even at one point in the same grammar school. We spent holidays and pretty much every school vacation together. As kids we had many adventures spending weeks at a time camping at Wildwood State Park. Hector was a very energetic adventurous child. My grandparents house was an oasis in the South Bronx. We were children there in the 70's when most of the buildings around us were abandoned or burnt out. Those building were often a backdrop for our games of spy or war. One of my strongest memories or Hector was during one of those war games. Hector was invincible. We were playing in one of those building being chased by another group of boys and were headed down the rickety stairways down to the ground floor. Dodging thru open apts trying to escape. I got to the first floor with Hector trailing me (or so I thought) and jumped out of the ground floor window onto the brick and rubble strewn lot. I turned to look for Hector and he wasn't there. I then looked up because I heard him give a battle cry and he was falling out of the second floor window. He jumped thinking it was the first floor. He hit the ground and paused for a second or two got up and yelled at me “run they're going to catch us !” That was Hector a strong crazy fun kid. And he was also a strong loving man. Although thru the years we haven't seen each other very much when we did it was like time never went by. We still had a bond a way of making each other laugh and tons of memories. I love you Hector you'll always be my Uncle/Little Brother
